The object of ..
the person using same, to ..
to form a protection for the knuckles.

For this purpose I manufacture the brush ... and material, but preferably of wood. One or both sides ... carried up to any required height to form a protecting flange for the ... handle which is gripped by the hand is joined at each central portion of the ... of the handle. This central portion may be either extremity to the solid ends of the ... or cut away altogether as found most joined by a narrow strip left at the bottom, ... is affixed. Between the central convenient for the class of brush to which it is ... cut away sufficiently to portion, & the exterior protective flanges, the handle is ... can be firmly allow of the free insertion of the hand, when the central portion ... which gripped by the fingers and thumb, the palm of the hand resting on the top ... is suitably rounded for that purpose. These handles may be made either with flat or curved bottoms to fit all descriptions of brushes, they can also be made detachable, that several brushes may be fitted consecutively on the same handle, as they are worn away with use. The brushes and handles may be made and sold either separately or together as one article. By the use of this my invention, not only is a better and more comfortable grip obtained whereby the cramping of the hand is prevented, but the knuckles are protected from coming in contact with
